LEARNING

CONSULTANCY SERVICES- Schools and Early Childhood Services

Busy Brains Learning is pleased to offer consultancy services to schools and early childhood services to provide a range of professional support in assisting children with Autism Spectrum Disorder and other developmental disabilities.

Amy Lanchester brings together extensive professional qualifications and experience in both education and disability services to provide high quality support for staff. Amy is registered as both a Developmental Educator (Allied Health Disability Specialist) and a teacher. She holds a Masters in Autism Studies and a Masters in Special Needs and Intervention Education (Early Intervention), and a Bachelor of Education. Amy has worked in the private and state education sectors, in mainstream and special education and the early childhood sector, as well as in private practice.

Schools Consultancy Packages can include:

- Coaching and mentoring staff within the school or service
- Assisting in the development of individual plans, and Positive Behaviour Support Plans
- Supporting programming and curriculum decision making and adjustments
- Assistance in designing and implementing environmental adjustments to support student needs
- Professional development and education around ASD, Early Intervention and disability
- Parent information and specific support, including understanding their child's educational needs and adjustments

These services are designed to be supportive, personalised and evidence-based. The aim of all support services is to enhance student engagement and learning, staff and student wellbeing and inclusive education approaches.

Services can be provided on an hourly or daily basis, or as part of an ongoing support package. Please contact amy@busybrainslearning.com.au for more information.
